Vidal attacks U.S. defense industry

Senatorial candidate Gore Vidal assailed U.S. defense industries Tuesday for perpetuating the nuclear arms race by influencing Congress through campaign contributions.

BY SHARYN SEARS

Staff Writer

Political focus should shift from defense to international commercial relations, Democratic senatorial candidate Gore Vidal said Tuesday.

Vidal, author and U.S. Senate hopeful, spoke to a capacity audience in Chumash Auditorium. He addressed the nuclear arms race and the big defense business that he said has perpetuated it.

Politicians today are shouting "the Reds (Communists) are coming," said Vidal, "so they can get campaign contributions from big defense industries. They are the enemies."

The arms race has cultivated in the American people a fear of communist invasion that is feeding the multi-billion dollar defense corporations, said Vidal, who advocated "a systematic destruction of all nuclear arms."

"I can't imagine either nation committing suicide," said Vidal, "unless it's by accident."

In the early days of humanity, individuals held a steadfast loyalty to their tribe. Today, said Vidal, we call that loyalty "patriotism" as small tribes have expanded to entire nations. Humanity has committed great atrocities in the name of this tribal loyalty, said Vidal.

Human survival

Nations today must shift from what he called this "tribal loyalty" to stressing the "survival of the human race as a whole."

Vidal said he has seen a change in the public mood during the two years he has been speaking — from an attitude that they cannot control the government to the feeling that they must control the government.

"They are saying 'We no longer believe what you tell us about enemies in the jungles of small worlds,'" said Vidal, "There is a growing perception today that maybe the nation-state is not so good."

A new type of loyalty, not to the "tribe" but to the whole earth, must be tapped in the people, said Vidal.

Vidal endorsed a tax structure including taxing corporations and exempting those citizens with an income below $11,700 from paying taxes. Corporations should pay 10 to 15 percent on their gross adjusted income, said Vidal. Private individuals with an income below the national mean would pay no income taxes at all, he added.

Vidal criticized the extensive budget as being devoted to defense spending, and in a question-and-answer period following his speech, said he would turn over the expense of NATO to the European nations.

Burning money

"You can't take one-third of the nation's money, and set fire to it," he said, referring to the lavish defense budget.

Vidal also said he supported a bilateral nuclear freeze.

Vidal said he does not advocate a unilateral disarmament, "just don't overdo it," he said, restating that "we" should work on commercial relations with other nations. "That's what the United States used to be very good at."

An alternative to nuclear energy should be found, according to Vidal, adding that he thinks nuclear power on the central California coast "is going to be phased out."

Hatred and fear still linger for Vietnam War veteran

BY TOM JOHNSON

Editor

The United States Army dutifully records that Corporal Bill Goodreau's involvement in the Vietnam War ended when he was shipped home Sept. 25, 1972.

But the records lie.

The Vietnam War has not ended for Goodreau, a 30-year-old Cal Poly engineering technology major. Though Goodreau crawled out of the Vietnam quagmire nearly ten years ago, he must still battle the hatred and fear which has lingered with him like a terminal illness — a battle which he is just now beginning to win.

When Goodreau stepped onto the jet which allowed him to escape from the Southeast Asia purgatory, he left behind a world of sorrow, of pain and of starvation. He left a world where time is measured in terms of survival instead of minutes. But Goodreau could not completely leave Vietnam behind. He brought back with him hatred — a hatred of the enemy, of the government, of the patriots and especially the Left. He also carried back the excess baggage of fear — the fear of thinking about the war and of telling about his experiences to others.

Hatred controlled

But through his faith in God and through the support of the Christian community, Goodreau said the hatred and fear which have long burned in him like a raging forest fire are now being controlled.

For more than nine years, Goodreau's life has been one of adjustment. That adjustment period began when he was plucked off the front lines and sent to Da Nang with three months to go on his tour of duty. Before, Goodreau had to prepare himself for the realization that every moment could be his last. But when he reached Da Nang, which was located behind the main lines, he knew he was going to survive.

The knowledge that he had survived the war left him with ambivalent feelings of "disbelief and a kind of happy sadness."

"Because after nine months of running around in I Corps (where he was a member of the Army air assault team), you really were different. You knew things would never be the same for you. And they weren't," said Goodreau.

Goodreau got an inkling of how different things were when he was ready to board the plane for home. He was greeted by the bright, youthful faces of

Kittens and puppies: the neglect goes on

BY STEPHANIE WINN

Staff Writer

For many Cal Poly students kittens and puppies can be a source of affection, companionship and a welcome deterrent from studies. But when the end of the quarter rolls around, some Cal Poly students treat their animals with little concern.

"If they can't take the animals with them and they're leaving school, some of them just let them go and hope they'll fend for themselves," said Pam Smith, manager of Wood's Humane Society.

Smith said 1,094 dogs and 1,160 cats were brought to their facility in 1981. All the animals were brought in privately, she explained, since the facility does not handle strays or lost dogs and cats.

"I would say about 30 percent of the animals brought in are owned by students at Cal Poly," said the 25-year-old Smith, a Cal Poly graduate.

Smith said that many students don't realize the commitment that goes along with owning a dog or cat. Every quarter break she said she sees an increase in the amount of dogs and cats brought into the facility.

"Students don't realize that these animals could take 15 or so years of their life," said Smith who has worked at Wood's for the past three years.

When people come to adopt an animal at Wood's, Smith explained, they are required to leave a $35 spay deposit. This is taken

Falklands conflict continues

British jets attacked the airstrip at the Falkland Islands capital of Stanley Tuesday and British warships shot down three Argentine Skyhawks, the Defense Ministry in London announced.

At the United Nations, Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez told the U.N. Security Council his government was prepared to consider a cease-fire, but British Ambassador Sir Anthony Parsons said any call for a truce was totally unacceptable as long as Argentine troops remained on the Falklands.

In London, Defense Ministry spokesman Ian McDonald said: "This morning in the Falkland Islands, naval and RAF Harrier aircraft from the task force attacked the runway and military installations at Port Stanley airfield. They were fired at but not hit. Our aircraft completed their task and returned safely."

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons before the announcement of the latest fighting there would be no cease-fire without total Argentine withdrawal and that the ousted British governor-general might return to the South Atlantic colony to reimpose British rule.

Carson's jokes affect opinion

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Johnny Carson's monologue jokes on the "Tonight Show" could have an affect on public opinion, even affecting the popularity of a president, says a University of Florida student researcher.

Hayakawa said Carson's jokes contributed to his decline in popularity.

Carson and other comedians make the presidency a common target for their jokes, Press said in a recent interview.

"No matter who the president is, comics will find something to ridicule," he said.

Japan lifts medfly restrictions

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Japan's lifting of almost all its restrictions on California produce imposed because of the Mediterranean fruit fly infestation was hailed by California farmers Tuesday.

"We're absolutely ecstatic about Japan's action, because it allows produce from the entire state to go over there," said Clark Biggs, spokesman for the California Farm Bureau.

Biggs said the Japanese restrictions, which required fumigation in California and cold storage in ships' holds, involved $55 million to $60 million annually in state produce.

Japan imposed its restrictions last year on California produce — mostly lemons, oranges, grapefruit, tomatoes, strawberries and avocados — to prevent spread of the medfly to that country.

California's medfly-affected exports to Japan total about $120 million annually, about half of that in lemons. The restrictions on lemons, which had cost California farmers an estimated $2 million per week, were lifted earlier in a separate action.

A decade later, Vietnam still haunts vet's memory

19-year-olds ready to serve their country by killing the Viet Cong. They served as stark contrasts to the hollow, aged faces of the men going home. Goodreau wanted to impart a word of warning to them, but the words got stuck in his throat.

"You don't know what to tell them. And there is a thousand miles, and a thousand steps and a thousand tears before they get where you are — if they are lucky enough to get there. You shake your head and say 'the damn dirty war' and just keep going on," Goodreau sighed.

It didn't take long for Goodreau to realize how much his life had changed once he arrived home. The tears of joy he shed when he stepped off the jet at Travis Air Force Base quickly turned to anger two hours later when he was prohibited from visiting his sister at San Jose State because he was still wearing a uniform.

Different world

When he returned home to Visalia the world seemed different. For the last year his life had changed with the speed of a tape recorder set on fast forward. But he had come back to a town where time had seemingly stood still.

Goodreau found that the bonds between his friends had dissolved. They seem so much younger, he thought. He no longer shared anything in common with them. Those friends he had once shared laughs and dreams with were friends no longer.

"It was funny being among friends you knew a year ago but you weren't friends any longer because our friendships had never been tested. They were based on a lot of illusion and on good times. Good times don't build friendships, they build acquaintances."

Goodreau also had to adjust to new roles which had developed between himself and his family — roles which were a source of some embarrassment.

"I had gone away a young man and come back something different. Our old roles weren't working. Even at 20 my mother couldn't just tell me to come home at a certain time. It just wouldn't work, it wasn't appropriate. All of us were stumbling through his new pattern of behavior," Goodreau said.

But though Goodreau had to struggle to adjust to himself and both his friends and family, Goodreau said a larger obstacle was dealing with his hatred and fear of thinking of Vietnam.

For a long time, I really avoided it. When I first got back to college I made the mistake of letting a few people know that I was a veteran. It didn't turn out too well. They weren't nasty, but some just weren't understanding. And that reinforced your inadequacies of dealing with the crisis. So like other people, I drank too much. I tried to deaden myself a little bit," Goodreau said.

Avoiding the war

Besides turning to the bottle to deaden his feelings toward the war, he also tried to desensitize himself by avoiding the subject of Vietnam entirely. Consequently, he moved from place to place, from job to job.

After serving in the Army for 18 months in Fort Hood, Texas, Goodreau went to the College of the Sequoias where he graduated with a degree in chemistry in 1977. He then held down a series of jobs.

But Goodreau could not remain rooted in one spot. He moved to Stockton where he studied engineering at San Joaquin Delta College in 1980 before coming to Cal Poly last year under the welding option of the Engineering Technology Department.

"I moved around a lot to stop people from getting too close. When people get close to you, you hurt, or they want to know more about you. So you avoided it," Goodreau said.

But after he arrived at Delta College he stopped running. He also began to quench the fires of hatred and fear which were consuming him. This transformation began by a simple act: He began to pray.

Goodreau had been raised a Roman Catholic. He had believed in the essential goodness of man. But after what he saw in Vietnam his faith in both God and human nature was shaken. Please see page 4

Christianity helps vet adjust to war hatred and fear

During the war he drifted away from that faith.

Reborn faith

But Goodreau returned to Catholicism a year and a half ago and received communion three or four months ago. Through his reborn faith, Goodreau has obtained the courage to stop retreating from his problems and the strength to try to extinguish the flames of hatred.

"Now I can turn to someone. I have the solace of the Bible, the Christian community to rely on. Before, when I was trying to struggle it out on my own; it was a very closed cycle. Being that I wasn't allowing myself any other input, nothing was being resolved."

"So now through Christ and my friends here it (the anger) is leaving me," Goodreau said with a smile and a note of triumph.

Goodreau's faith, mixed with his Vietnam experiences, has him looking at the world differently. Goodreau now marvels at things that people probably take for granted: the beauty of nature and the beauty of relationships.

Goodreau remembers coming out of the math building one day and standing on the grassy knoll which faces the old library. There he heard the loud, methodical hum of helicopters — a sound he heard often in Vietnam. Goodreau then looked around himself and saw couples dressed in gayly colored shirts, pants and dresses.

"I rejoiced in the miraculousness of normality," Goodreau mused.

Goodreau stressed that though his faith has aided him in dealing with the illness of fear and hatred that the Vietnam War inflicted upon him, religion has not been a cure-all. The anger which once consumed him has been quenched, but it hasn't been eliminated.

"I don't know how far I have to go, but I just know that I'm on the journey though. I'm taking some steps. I learned at a Bible study once that you really have to be moving for Jesus to guide you. Now I am moving and He is guiding me."

Cal Poly students abandon their pets

as a coupon to a local vet which is reimbursed for his services by the humane society.

"I can't tell students not to own pets but I do advise them not to get an animal unless they are willing to keep it and take care of it properly," said Smith.

Smith said that when students adopt animals at the humane society she tries to educate them to the animal's needs before sending the animal home.

"It's just their attitude I would like to change," said Smith. "I want students to understand and accept responsibility for their animals."

Smith said that many of the students pick up a dog or cat, keep it for a year and then dispose of it either by bringing it back to the humane society or just letting it go.

Out of the animals brought in 47 percent of the dogs are eventually adopted and 38 percent of the cats are adopted. The humane society takes all kinds of animals, unlike Animal Regulation which handles only dogs and cats.

Wood's, Smith explained, is privately owned while Animal Regulation is run by the County of San Luis Obispo.

CAR CLASS SCHEDULE

The cost of the CAR Class Schedule has gone down thanks to the efforts of Tim Martini, a member of the ASI Student Senate. Tim is on Co-op leave this quarter and is unable to see the fruits of his labor. The following is a letter sent to him, which sums up our appreciation for his hard work.

May 6, 1982

Dear Tim:

We would like to thank you for your diligent efforts in reducing the cost of CAR schedules while you served on the Administrative Committee of the ASI Student Senate.

As a senator from the School of Engineering and Technology, you lived up to the greatest goal of the Senate, that of serving the students. The thirty cents (30¢) per quarter that you are saving each student adds up over the years. What is even more significant is your demonstration of the fact that student voice is heard and does have impact on this campus.

On behalf of all California Polytechnic State University students who purchase class schedules, we thank you for your time and effort in completing a difficult task.

Good luck in all future endeavors.

Sincerely,

Student Senate 1981-82

ESCORT SERVICE

"The Escort Service is on its feet and going good", said Larry Greene who is in charge of the service. "The service is the only successful volunteer escort program in California," said Greene.

Students can use the service at new hours from 8:00 PM to 12:00 midnight, Monday-Thursday. Also, students can contact the Escort Service at a new phone number—546-1182.

The fraternities who have helped make the escort service so successful by volunteering their time deserve a big thanks. They include: Alpha Epsilon Pi, Alpha Gamma Rho, Alpha Phi Alpha, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Alpha Upsilon, Delta Sigma Phi, Delta Tau, Phi Kappa Psi, Theta Chi and Lambda Chi Alpha.

CAPITAL IMPROVEMENTS POLL

A student opinion poll on capital improvements was recently conducted by the Polling Committee of the A.S.I. Student Relations Board.

The survey was designed to obtain the opinions of Cal Poly students regarding three proposed capital improvements. The three proposals were:

1. University Union Satellite
2. Intramurals Complex Facility
3. Aquatic Center Located at Lopez Lake.

The survey was conducted by means of a questionnaire administered during the 1982 ASI elections.

Approximately 18% of the student population was polled during the survey. Since the respondents were not able to give their schools and majors, it is not known how representative the sample is of the entire student body.

The results show that students sampled were overwhelmingly in favor of seeing each of the capital improvements. When fee increases are taken into consideration, however, the results show that the students have mixed feelings.

The satellite union is a building proposed to be 20,000 square feet which would have a food facility, a technical bookstore, lounge/meeting areas, automatic bank tellers, and a large multi-use area in conjunction with the food service area.

Total cost of the project is estimated to be between $1.5 to $1.75 million. University Union fee increases of $15 to $17 per year are necessary to begin construction. Construction could start as soon as mid-1983 and be completed in one year.

Of those students polled, 72.2% are in favor of the satellite union project if a fee increase is not taken into consideration. When considering the fee increase 44.5% of those students polled were in favor of the satellite union project.

The second issue posed to students was a proposed intramurals complex. The complex would be a multi-sport facility, built on the outdoor track area near the dorms. The facility would house an open area for basketball, volleyball, floor hockey, racquetball and squash courts, a weight room, an indoor track and pool. It would have the ability to seat up to 7,000 people for concerts and other activities. Total cost of the project is estimated to be between 10 to 12 million dollars. Funding for this project will be provided by a University Union fee increase as well as private donations.

Cost aside, 79% of those students polled favor this project, while only 48.9 percent of the students favor the project after taking cost into consideration.

The proposed Aquatics Center to be located on Lopez Lake was favored by 61.9% of the students polled. The Center would offer classes on sailing, wind surfing, kayaking and canoeing and no additional fee increases would be necessary, since funding would come from grant writing programs, loans and revenue generated by the facility. The center would be a university/community facility.

The ASI Student Relations Board would like to thank all of those people who completed the survey.

OUTINGS

ASI Outings will be sponsoring a variety of trips over Memorial Day weekend open to all Cal Poly students, faculty, staff and their guests. Among the excursions planned are:

Owens River Canoeing
Canoe through the Owens Valley, bounded on the West by the Sierra Nevada and on the East by the White Mountains. A narrow, fast, twisting river, the Owens should prove to be a challenging run, however, no experience is required. All this at a cost of only $36, including food, transportation and canoes. Sign ups begin May 19 at noon.

Mineral King Backpacking
The second annual early season high altitude Western Sierra milieu cognizance expedition. A moderate to advanced backpack out of the Mineral King Valley in Sequoia National Park. The trip may include some mountain climbing for those interested. For sign up date and trip cost, visit the Escape Route.

For more information on these and other trips, visit the Escape Route, downstairs in the University Union. ASI Outings Committee meetings are held every Tuesday at 7:00 PM in UU 220.

Kennedy Meadows Horsepacking
Pack through the Southern Sierra Nevada out of the Kennedy Meadows Pack station. The $112 trip cost includes transportation, horses and an outrageous menu. Sign ups are open and require a $50 deposit.

It's 9:45 Saturday night in Sacramento, 15 minutes before the sidewalks get rolled in. Warm and snug in their booth high atop Hughes Stadium, two ESPN announcers are calling the action of the NCAA Division II track championships.

"Well, Bill, this has been some meet. Here we are, seconds away from the last event, the 1,600 relay, and four teams — Cal Poly San Luis Obispo, Cal State Bakersfield, Cal State Los Angeles, and Mt. St. Marys — still have a shot at the title. Here's the gun and they're off. Greg Holmes of Los Angeles and Brad Underwood go out very fast, with Bakersfield's Erwin Hickman a close third. Now to the second leg, and CSLA's Lindel Hodge has a good lead. But here comes Shon Bowles of Cal Poly, and they hand the baton off evenly.

"The three runners — Bakersfield's Derrick Carter, Cal Poly's Rick Richard, and Los Angeles' Bennie Hollis — are sprinting down the backstretch, with Los Angeles in first, followed by Bakersfield and Poly. Anthony Perry of Los Angeles begins the final lap, but here come Bakersfield's Jeff Garrett and Poly's Pat Croft. It's Garrett and Croft with 180 meters left, but there goes Croft! They're sprinting the homestretch, and Garrett can't stay with him! Croft hits the tape, and Cal Poly wins its fourth straight title!"

All right, maybe that's an exaggeration. But that almost happened just 11 short days ago in the California Collegiate Athletic Association championships, where four points separated the first four teams. And if this year's national meet isn't a repeat of the conference meet, then it promises to be very close to a carbon copy.

The Mustangs men's team, slightly disturbed and extremely fired-up after the conference meet, will send 13 athletes in 17 Please see page 7 events to seek its fourth straight national title.

The only 1981 champion back for an encore is Vernon Sallaz, who won the 800 last year in 1:49.12.

Croft may well be the most tired Mustang come Saturday night, as in four days he might have to run heats, semifinals, and finals in the 200, 400, short relay, and 1,600 relay.

Steve Strangio might run the deadly double of the track, the 5,000 and the 10,000, only if semifinals aren't run. If two races are the fashion for the 5,000, Strangio will only run one event.

Another multi-event man will be Ron Waynes, who's entered in the 100, the long jump, and the short relay. Waynes has bests of 10.56 in the 100 and 25-4 1/2 in the long jump. Mark Kibort, third in last year's national meet in the pole vault and twice the CCAA titlist, will compete in the pole vault with Steve Thomas and anchor the short relay.

Hurdler Brad Underwood will be among the favorites in the 400 intermediates with a life time best of 51.5, and will lead off the 1,600 relay.

Jailed knowledge

Last week two American reporters in Uganda were detained for two days and beaten while visiting military barracks. After being whipped, they were thrown into a cell with nearly 100 other prisoners.

The two, Charles Powers, of the Los Angeles Times, and Robert Rosenthal, of the Philadelphia Enquirer, were in the Bombo area of Uganda which has been the target of guerrilla activity recently. The guerrillas, most of whom were army troops under former dictator Idi Amin, are trying to unseat President Milton Obote, whom the guerillas say rigged the 1980 election that returned him to power after an eight year exile. It was this activity Powers and Rosenthal were attempting to report on.

It is not good these days for foreign correspondents reporting from violent areas of the globe. Bringing facts to the readers of the world is a job that receives little appreciation from the governments that reportage usually questions. Last summer, Columbia detained and tortured an American reporter for 15 days. He was arrested at the airport with notes and tapes of interviews with anti-government guerrillas. Television reporters have been fired on by government troops in El Salvador and Guatemala has detained its own share of journalists reporting on guerrilla activity in that country. It seems even reporting that anti-government activity exists is taboo in Central America and other trouble spots.

But, more than this, foreign correspondence is also a job that receives little appreciation or support from the public that serves, informs and represents. The presence of foreign journalists, and therefore an informed world public opinion, has done more to deter illegal detentions than any slap on the wrist from Washington D.C. Your knowledge of such activities, both detentions of journalists and the activities they report, has saved lives and freed falsely arrested individuals. It is that knowledge that is jailed, beaten and tortured with each reporter arrested in another more violent, insecure area of the world.

Next time you hear of a similar situation, react. At least be concerned. There is more than the one life of a pesty reporter at stake. There are many others who will be saved by the simple knowledge that their plight is known to more than the people trying to remove, arrest or simply annihilate them. And that knowledge is yours, not a newspaper's.

Letters

Examine your own thinking

Editor:

This letter is in reply to the letter published in the May 25th edition of the Daily by computer science and statistics professor Jay Devore.

I'm glad you felt the need to respond to an editorial. Many people say they disagree with what any given newspaper may publish, but do little about it. However, you accuse the Daily's editorial staff of "fuzzy thinking," and it's my opinion you need to examine your own.

A good portion of your letter stressed the need for parents to sacrifice their pleasures in order to provide additional support for their college student offspring. I realize many people have the idea Cal Poly is a "rich-kid" campus, but is it really? The next time financial aid checks are disbursed, I suggest you notice the number of people in line. Any given school is going to have its share of well-off students, but those struggling like me to make ends meet are far more the norm.

Do you honestly believe parents with "hot tubs, video-recorders, and recreational vehicles" are putting their enjoyment ahead of their child's education? These are hard times, professor, and those with money to burn like that are few and far between. My own parents have worked virtually all their lives to get by, and while I never wanted for the basic necessities of life, there were no luxuries, either. My folks live on a fixed income now that both are retired, and while I'm sure they would help me if they could, they simply can't. My college education is my own responsibility, and I resent the implication made that parents put vacations ahead of their children's needs.

One final point. You said that if the "(student) fees doubled or tripled, you would still be getting a fantastic bargain compared to what it would cost to go to a private college or university." The reason I'm a student in the CSU system is because I couldn't even begin to afford a school like Stanford, or even U.C. Berkeley, your alma mater. A state university was the only option open to me. I had the grades to get in, but not the financial backing. It's taken me longer than some to graduate, because I've found it necessary from time to time to leave school for a while and work full-time, so I could afford this "bargain." If fees go up much more, and financial aid is cut back any more, I'm afraid Cal Poly will be minus at least one student because I won't be able to afford the "bargain rates."
